CREDIT CARD RISK NOTIFICATION

A new law enacted by New York State in October 2024 requires healthcare providers to inform patients of the financial risks of using credit cards to pay for medical expenses.

When you pay for medical services using a credit card, that debt is no longer considered “medical debt” under federal and New York State law. As a result, you may lose important consumer protections that typically apply to medical debt, including protections related to credit reporting, interest rate limits, and collections practices.

Additionally, credit card payments may subject you to:

- High interest rates and late fees
- Fewer options for dispute resolution
- Increased long-term financial burden

We strongly encourage you to consider alternative payment options before using a credit card, including:

- Interest-free payment plans through our office
- Health savings accounts (HSAs) or flexible spending accounts (FSAs)
- Financial assistance or hardship programs, if eligible
